

Tabatha Moore Westberry has a diverse background that combines business administration with hands-on experience in the well drilling industry. Born in Palatka, Florida in 1978, she was raised next door to her grandfather's well drilling business, which played a significant role in shaping her career path. After graduating from Palatka High School in 1996, she pursued a career in Business Administration, eventually earning her bachelor's degree in organizational management from St. Johns River State College.

Westberry initially worked with her family's well drilling business until the economic downturn in 2008 prompted her to explore other opportunities, leading her to work in healthcare for a period. This experience broadened her skills and perspective, particularly in caring for others, which she considers valuable across industries.

Following her grandfather's passing in 2017, Westberry recognized the importance of continuing his legacy and saw an opportunity to contribute to the family business by obtaining her water well contractor's license the same year. Having grown up observing the dynamics of the drilling industry, she aspired to leverage her knowledge and passion to help the business thrive.

Eager to contribute to the industry at large, Westberry aims to become involved with the Florida Groundwater Association, viewing it as a platform to advocate for the interests of those involved in well drilling. She seeks to use her firsthand experience to provide insights into industry challenges and opportunities, with a particular interest in influencing legislation and initiatives that shape the future of the sector. Through her involvement, Westberry hopes to steer the industry towards a prosperous future while honoring her grandfather's legacy.
